- Litigation

Overview

Florence resolves complex commercial litigation in federal and state courts for individuals and public and privately held companies.

Florence draws on her broad-based experience defending and prosecuting claims – including, employment law claims (including discrimination, harassment, wrongful termination, and restrictive covenant disputes), partnership and shareholder disputes, breach of contract actions, business torts, art litigation, and professional malpractice insurance matters – to identify and pursue solutions that advance her clients' objectives.

Clients appreciate Florence's understanding of their operations and industry, her ability to identify business solutions for their disputes, and her passion for resolving issues that challenge their success.

Florence excels in all stages of civil litigation. She has coordinated discovery, taken depositions, drafted and argued dispositive motions, prepared clients and witnesses for trial and litigated through trial, briefed appeals, and more generally helped clients navigate the strain and disruption of litigation. In addition to Florence's extensive experience representing clients in the financial services industry, she has represented clients from nearly every sector of the economy, including entertainment, fashion, art, manufacturing, healthcare, construction, and legal.

Prior to joining Zukerman Gore, Florence was a litigation attorney at O'Melveny & Myers and Dewey Ballantine. She is an avid kickboxer.
